

The Indiana Telephone Privacy law has been one of the greatest regulations that has occurred in the states history. No more jumping up from the dinner table to answer a call I didn't want. Any federal regulation that would preempt the Indiana law with a more lenient policy toward telemarketers would not be in the best interest of the public. If anything, the federal regulation should totally ban telemarketing.